Happiness 101: Yale University's most popular course ever

Psychology professor Laurie Santos debuted the class in the 2018 spring semester, and it's officially the most popular course in the university's 317-year history. About 1200 students, or a quarter of Yale's undergraduate student body, are currently enrolled. Now that a free version of the course has launched on Coursera, the curriculum is about to reach even more learners.

PLANTS MAKE PEOPLE HAPPY

“Most of the psychological benefits of potted plants have been tied to viewing green, leafy ones, such as ficus trees and ferns.

Scientific research tells us that green leafy plants help boost our mood. If there are nearby plants, we also seem to get along better with others. For many of us, most of the time, those two benefits are reason enough to test out our green thumbs with a few houseplants. We also feel better physically when we're around plants — ”
